

Introduction to Literary Studies

The primary aim of the course is to arouse or strengthen students' interest in a systematic reception of literature in general, and especially in the literature of English-speaking countries.

The course provides students with literary theory and brings to their attention specific features of literature written in English. By the end of this course students will have learned how to distinguish between serious and consumer literature. Seminar discussions focus on analysing modern literature in select examples.