

Introduction to Psychology

The course aims to provide students with a rudimentary knowledge of the discipline of Psychology. By the end of this course students will have achieved orientation first in specific terminology, secondly in development of 20th century psychological thought trends and finally in fundamental processes, states and qualities of personalities within individual systems.

The seminars are interactive and theoretical knowledge is applied to both the private and professional lives of students.

The acquired knowledge is a prerequisite for further studies in this field within the BA programme and its specialisations.
