

Introduction to Territorial Studies - Anglophone World

The introductory part of this course aims to familiarise students with the phenomenon of the spread of English as the first or second language, as well as a foreign language. It provides students with information both on statistical data related to speakers and users of English, and to the varieties of English used in different parts of the world. It focuses not only on the national characteristics of individual English-speaking countries but also on the relations between countries within the Anglophone world. The introductory part also addresses the position of Anglosphere in international relations. The course continues with a close description and analyses of individual English-speaking countries.
